Process Paper

→ For this year's National History Day competition, our team decided to research the 1891-92 Coal Creek War. While in the process of selecting a topic, we formulated a list of requirements that our topic had to fulfill, because it was consequential to us that our topic had local, state and national significance. While researching ~~local~~ Anderson County, Tennessee history, we discovered the Coal Creek War and knew immediately that it was ~~an exemplary~~ the perfect subject for our performance. We found that The Coal Creek War not only reflects this year's NHD theme, but also our own personal interests, therefore making it a pleasure to research.

→ We conducted our research through a series of shareable online documents for the ~~sole~~ purpose of group accessibility. Our research was mostly based on primary sources. We contacted many notable authors, historians, and archivists. One of our favorite people that we ~~contacts~~ interviewed was Charles Winfrey, the historian at the Coal Creek Miners ~~museum~~ Museum ~~and notable author. Through many hour long phone call and packages that he shipped to us containing thousands of hand copied manuals, letters, maps, and our personal favorite, an autographed copy of his own book, Mr. Winfrey taught us so much about a topic that we previously thought we knew.~~ Mr. Winfrey mentored us through the research process, sharing with us hand copied manuals, letters, maps, and an autographed copy of his own book. He also generously devoted many hours to phone calls, discussing [include a topic you discussed—the daily life of the miners, the finer points of the convict-leasing system, the response of the locals—something like that]. Though we conducted our research for about three months, October through December 2017, we never stopped learning about our topic. After each stage of the competition—school, regional, and state—we revised our project to incorporate the judges'
